Background

Grief is a natural response to the death of someone close. It is a deeply personal experience that varies widely from person to person. A person's experience of grief is influenced by many things, such as the relationship with the deceased, the circumstances of their death, and a person's support system, among many other factors.

Many people, although painful, will cope with loss with support from their family and friends. For lots of different reasons, some will need additional support to cope from people outside their social network. Understanding grief and learning how to navigate it can be helpful not only for those directly experiencing loss but also for those supporting them.

National Grief Awareness Week 2025 is taking place 27 January - 02 February. Through National Grief Awareness Week, we hope to encourage a more open, supportive, and understanding approach to grief—helping both the bereaved and those around them navigate this challenging part of life with greater empathy.

This promotion pack includes all our NGAW 2025 promotional assets and some suggestions about how you can get involved in this campaign.

Visit our NGAW 2025 webpage for more information about events we're hosting throughout the week.

Key Messages

The following messages can be added to your newsletters, emails, website, or any other communications you're planning for National Grief Awareness Week:

- Grief is expressed and felt in different ways. There is no right or wrong way to grieve.
- How we experience grief and loss depends on a range of factors, such as our coping style, relationship with the deceased and cultural practices.
- There are no stages of grief; it ebbs and flows.
- There is no time limit to grief; it takes the time it takes.
- Don't assume people 'get used' to loss grief in old age is still grief.

Suggested Tweet:

Myth: Older people are more prepared to cope with grief because they are more likely to have more experience of it.

Fact: People do not simply 'get over' their grief but over time find ways to accommodate their grief within their lives.

Suggested Tweet:

You don't need any particular skills to support someone who is grieving. You can ask them to meet for a walk, drop by for a cup of tea or offer practical help, such as preparing a meal. It can all go a long way. #BeGriefAware #NGAW2025 @IrishHospice

Suggested Tweet: There are no stages of grief; it ebbs and flows. Some feelings might come occasionally or catch you by surprise. Others might be more persistent. For bereavement supports, visit @IrishHospice's Bereavement Hub bereaved.ie #BeGriefAware #NGAW2025

Suggested Tweet: Grief is as unique to an individual as their fingerprint. There is no one right way to grieve, and no two people's reactions will be the same. For bereavement supports, visit @IrishHospice's Bereavement Hub bereaved.ie #BeGriefAware #NGAW2025

Suggested Tweet: Most bereaved people welcome the chance to talk about the person they lost. Don't avoid mentioning the person who has died — you don't lessen grief by avoiding the subject. #BeGriefAware #NGAW2025 @IrishHospice Suggested Tweet: Know someone who is grieving? It's important to be there for them in the early days but also in the weeks and months ahead. There is no time limit to grief; it takes the time it takes. #BeGriefAware #NGAW2025 @IrishHospice
